The Story of Victoria's Torton Tales

Wendy Wakelin grew up in the small market town of Petersfield in Hampshire, England. From a very early age, actually, from about 6 weeks old, Wendy started going to Steam and Vintage shows and rallies across the South of England. Her father, David Rose, had a collection of old British Motorcycles and Petrol and Paraffin stationary engines which the family would exhibit at the shows and rallies.

It was at these events that Wendy saw and admired the steam Traction Engines on display and as she grew up she always thought how wonderful it would be to own a Traction Engine!

Fast forward to her mid teens and the beginning of her relationship with her now husband, Lloyd Wakelin. Lloyd's great, great grandfather, Walter Seward, had started a Threshing and Haulage business back in 1886 with the purchase of a Marshall Agricultural Traction Engine.

In 1996 Wendy and Lloyd met the original engine Walter Seward bought back in 1886 to start his business. The engine was called "Victoria, Empress of India".

2002 "Victoria" was for sale and Wendy and Lloyd decided they wanted her back in the family once more. It was now that Wendy's two sons, Jack and Harry were smitten by the steam engine bug. Introduced to the world of steam shows and rallies, and they loved the freedom.

It was a few months after buying "Victoria" that Wendy wrote the first two stories about the engine and these were regularly read to Jack and Harry, who thoroughly enjoyed them.

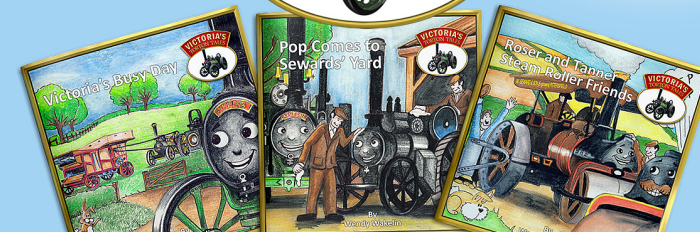

The years passed, the boys grew up and the stories got put in a box in a cupboard. Then late in 2015, Lloyd happened upon the stories and it was decided it was time to let other boys and girls enjoy them as much as Jack and Harry had. That was the beginning of "Victoria's Torton Tales".

Victoria's Busy Day

Victoria likes nothing more than spending a busy day working with her owner, Mr. Seward, and friend Albert, bringing the sacks of corn in from the fields. Today there's a surprise when Victoria discovers something in the barn at Mr. Andrews' farm.

Pop Comes to Swards' Yard

It had been quite some time since poor old Pop was last in steam and helping Mr Andrews on his farm. He longed to be out in the sunshine instead of being stuck in a cold, damp and dusty barn with junk piled up around him. Will he ever leave the barn again?

Roser and Tanner Steam Roller Friends

It's an early start for best friends, Roser and Tanner, the steam rollers. Tanner wants to get going, and Roser is happy to be out and about with his friend. On this trip, Tanner is given the chance to try something new, that normally only Roser does. Will she do it?
